Aplastic Anemia offers a Peer Support Network (previously the Global Support Network) to help other patients and their families who are affected by bone marrow disease. Support through conversation is invaluable. Members of the Network are patients and family members who talk with other families about their treatment experiences and the emotional aspects of coping with aplastic anemia, MDS and other bone marrow diseases. These volunteers are all ages and from all walks of life.

Become a volunteer to network with others and help them gather information, resolve special issues, receive emotional support and to make friends.
